Asaya

Stuck between 90s funk and the energy of today's clubs, ASAYA gave it a name: Fast Funk.

Fast Funk runs between 140 and 155 BPM: raw club energy filtered through funk and disco, set against an obsessive universe of open roads, fast cars, and the particular absurdity of always being in too much of a hurry.

On record and on stage, ASAYA plays the willing anti-hero: swept up by the excesses of his era, moving too fast to stop.

Motorway Parano EP

“The world lies better at high speed..”

Motorway Parano is ASAYA's last EP: five Fast Funk tracks crossing a desert where facts dissolve and groove is the only thing left standing. Vocoder disco, electric hardgroove, chopped French touch samples. Inspired by Justice and Chromeo. A sonic road trip through the post-truth era, somewhere between paranoia and euphoria.

Each track comes with a music video shot in the Spanish desert, rooted in the world of Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas.

The EP is supported by
Bad Boombox and Ben Derris.
